PLAYHOUSE-ON-THE-MOORS

Review of First Set of Plays at the Playhouse-on-the-Moors

Our judgment of the first group of plays at the Playhouse-on-the-Moors must be even more imperfect than most judgments, owing to the great storm on the first night that played havoc with the lights, and the drumming of the rain on the roof that drowned the actors' voices. But as a first word—or nearly a first—let us say that the actors rose splendidly to the emergency and were surprisingly little put out by the intermittent thunder and darkness. In presenting Maeterlinck's "Monna Vanna," it was wisely decided to omit the first act; so Mrs. Louise Closser Hale gave the substance of that omission and showed what art can do with even the stripped bones of a synopsis.

The tent scene of "Monna Vanna" is an extraordinary difficult act to play and needs a constant variation of tempo to keep it going. The players showed the result of skillful coaching. Mr. Buswell's handsome carriage and voice were, as always, a pleasure. Mrs. Parsons showed deep feeling and poetic appreciation and understanding of Monna Vanna and too much can not be said in praise of her interpretation. Edward Massey, as Guido, gave a fine performance in the role of angry, outraged husband. Hobart Nichols as Guido's father, though on the stage but little, gained the sympathy of his audience.

Too much can not be said for the artistic staging of "Monna Vanna." The intimate little stage was beautifully arranged. Simplicity of setting and richness of color was the keynote. The picture of the tent scene, as the curtain rose, made by the spots of brilliant color of costumes and hangings, unified by the skillful use of indirect lighting, was one to carry away in memory with pleasure. In consulting our program we find that Rita Langhorne and Martha Flint, Reginald Lawrence, Robert Goode, had charge of costumes, scenery and lighting, respectively, and they are certainly to be congratulated.

Moliere's "The Doctor by Compulsion" followed. It was played on a bare scaffolding of unpainted planks with no other scenery than three chairs. As good luck would have it,

GOL. ANDREW'S CANDIDACY

Summer residents and others along the North Shore will hear with peculiar gratification the news that Col. A. Piatt Andrew of Eastern Point, yielding to the importunities of many influential citizens, has consented to run for Congress in the Sixth Essex district.

This news should be especially gratifying, inasmuch that it is seldom that a man of the calibre of Col. Andrew is offering for this office and where the office has so importuned the man it is the duty of all good citizens, irrespective of party, to do all they possibly can by example and precept to bring about his nomination, which in this district is equivalent to an election.

Col. Andrew exemplifies at once the scholar and patriot. He has had an extended experience in Washington as one of the chief officials of the monetary commission, and his work during the World War was especially brilliant. He went in at the start in 1914 and organized the American ambulance corps which proved of inestimable value to the French wounded and his labors were such that he was accorded the medal of the Legion of Honor and the Croix de Guerre.

At the entrance of this country into the war he was commissioned in the army and won the D. S. M. medal which bears its own attestation.

Col. Andrew is a graduate of Princeton and has given close attention to economic subjects and his ac-

MEDICINE AND MOLIERE

On August 9, 1866, Moliere's Le Medecin Malgre Lui was presented to the public. Moliere considered it a "flimsy bit of wit," but his audience hilariously proclaimed it a mirth potion of magic power.

Plays that deal with medicine always appeal to the afflicted public, but give us medicine, mirth—witness the success of "The Boomerang" some years ago—and Moliere and the combination has a "run" that cover centuries! However, if those of us who came over in the Mayflower have inherited a propensity for taking our pleasures seriously, Moliere is equally satisfactory—we defy any one who has suffered at the hands of the profession, and paid dearly in hard earned cash for the privilege to see Le Medecin Malgre Lui without the exceeding joy of the dumb who have found an able interpreter. Of course, we have the greatest respect for the M.D., but like Thibaud's wife, we, too, have been "sick o' the hypocrisy" and have been offered "medicated cheese" as a remedy.

In 1896 Professor H. Folet, a French physician, member of the Faculty of Medicine at Lille, published a truly delicious book called "Moliere and the Physicians of His Time," in which he proved conclusively that Moliere was not giving us a burlesque of existing conditions, but "realistic studies" from the medical research work of his time! Moliere was "coached" in all seriousness by his own doctor in his famous theories of the temperaments, the four humors, and such quaint relics of a by-gone day.

Professor Folet quotes authentic records of Louis XIII, who suffered at the hands of his physician in one year no less than 215 prescriptions, 212 lotions and 47 blood lettings! He also refers us to that remarkable document known as the "Journal of Louis XIV's Health," which was kept day by day for fifty-nine years. Imagine the sum total of his—well, we consider it wiser to leave it all to the imagination. Suffice to say that he was medically treated "not wisely but too well."

Of course, as Sganarelle responded when Geronte humbly remarked that he thought the heart was situated on the left side and the liver on the right, "Yes, formerly they were so; but we

A WINDOW

That fire-belching dragon, the rushing train,
Roared its narrow way
Past houses of many heartless windows—
"Tenements, tenements, tenements!" it screamed.
On the ledge of one window
There grew
Two golden sunflowers
Placed like tall tapers on a wayside shrine;
And a vine
Ran up each side of the window
Covering the red and even bricks
To make a living frame
It set me wondering of the soul within
Who draped the window—
Is it a lover of leaves
That make designs upon the very sky?
Perchance, a brother poet
Who, shutting out all the world
With little green curtains,
Forgets his poverty
And grows rich in dreams.

Or is it a sun-worshiper from lands afar
Whose color-famished heart
Feeds upon those orange petals?
It may be some pale girl, in whose keen ear
The pipes of Pan resound
Whence came the earth
In which her green things grow?
Does she at night send Groping thoughts—
Godward—
Up her vines?
And when the sun
Flames from those burnished disks
Does she know that they light her altar?

* * * *

In all the stony frames of these houses
That never wince as the dragon hurtles by,
There is no picture
So human
As this one vine-clad window!

—Alice C. Rodewald.

CAPTAIN CHARLES P. VAUGHAN HONORED

The summer colony along the North Shore will be interested in learning that Capt. Charles P. Vaughan of Salem, who for years had a fine summer residence in the Peabody suburbs, was awarded the degree of Doctor of Science at the recent commencement of Bucknell University, Lewisburg, Penn.

After graduation from Phillips Andover he became associated with his father and his brother, Maj. Ira Vaughan, in the Vaughan Machine Co. of Peabody, which developed the largest leather working machine business in the world.

Later he and his brother, Ira, acquired sole ownership in the Dungan, Hood & Co. leather corporation of Philadelphia, one of the largest concerns of its kind in the world.

Capt. Vaughan has always been active in matters of public concern. He served ten years in the Massachusetts militia, retiring with the rank of captain.

During the war he rendered invaluable service, giving unsparingly of his time to Liberty bond drives, being chairman of Industrial Group 19, whose subscriptions to the various loans to the fuse blew out to stay just after "Monna Vanna," so the "Doctor" was played by the light of two high-standing candelabra, held by richly robed pages. The spirited acting and the rare courtliness of the Louis XIV costumes in that mellow illumination gave extraordinarily the thrill of seeing an old play in an old time, of rolling back the past and revealing there the ancient drama in the artless and unbuttoned days of its youth.

Carl Nordell as Sganarelle, the center of that brilliant farce, gave amply the loose open-air freedom of this greatest of clowns. All the cast was so fine and true that it is a shame not to be able to devote space to each one. It was a performance far above the average in its joyous ease and vigor. We wish to mention two characterizations, however, who linger brilliantly in memory: Madeleine Laurent's virago, Martine and Hobart Nichols' Squire Robert of the over-delicate flower.

Miss Cunningham and Mrs. Evans most assuredly gave us a highly artistic bill, which was a fine achievement of earnest, eager striving for what is fine and interesting on the stage.

The entertainment at the Community Dramatic School last Saturday was a talk by Mrs. Louise Closser Hale. Mrs. Hale had announced Diction as her subject, but kindly said she had found the Playhouse so excellent in this respect that this topic was not needed. She gave an amusing account of her early Western diction and her experiences in a Boston "School of Oratory." She said her second choice of subjects had been "The Ethics of the Theatre," that is, the conduct of the actor back stage, his silence, that the actors playing the scene may not be disturbed. But even that had to be abandoned, for she found the off-stage silence more admirably respectful of the actors on the scene in the Playhouse-on-the-Moors than in most professional theatres. Mrs. Hale then gave an author's reading from one of her books, and, as an especial treat, read from the proof sheets her soon-to-be-published one-act comedy, "To Meet the Prince." Miss Goinsette Talma played on the piano, and Miss Madeleine Laurent sang three songs, Luigi Arditi's "Il Bacio," Teresa del Riegi's "Thank God for a Garden," and Xavier Leroux's lovely "Le Nil."

have changed all that. We practise medicine nowadays on quite another system."

And yet, we know, today, a charming young woman who obediently eats raw onions at her doctor's command—her fiance eats them with her: "greater love hath no man than this"—and a wild Westerner of our acquaintance reclines upon an ironing board, tipped so that her heels are higher than her head, twice daily, to gratify her physician! Is it any wonder that strange practices never die when human beings invite such treatment? How Moliere would have enjoyed the two cases cited! For Moliere, as Romain Rolland has so aptly worded it, was an "opulent mixture of opposed temperaments; he had two natures, as it were, one that analyzed life with ironic finesse, another that reveled gaily in it."

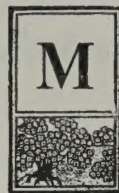

Speaking of Romain Rolland, it was he who called our attention to the fact that "in France the first man who was able to realize the ideals of a People's Theatre was Maurice Pottecher." And how did he set about it? By producing, on September 22, 1892, a patois translation of Moliere's "Le Medecin Malgre Lui," at the little village of Bussang, with great success.

A short time ago we had a famous tug-of-wits at the Doctor's Service Corps concerning highly unsatisfactory dentistry which we refused to encourage financially. It was evident that the excellent representative of that worthy organization thought we were right, as he reduced the bill to a minimum, but he expatiated on the impossibility of our proving it in court. "Every one," he insisted, "stands by the doctor. We are all liable to error and no man would be a doctor if he had to face his mistakes." So thought Moliere, and I went home to read that perfect passage in which Sganarelle speaks of the advantages of his new trade. . . . "I begin to think I'll stay a doctor all my life for whether he does well or whether he does ill he is paid the same." And I found myself able to dismiss my recent experience with a broad smile.

After all, laughter is the best medicine for the ills of this life, and he who laughs most, laughs longest, so if one must have a doctor let him hie to Moliere, who is, also, a "doctor in spite of himself."

THE ROCKPORT SHORE

ORE and more Rockport is becoming a resort for artists. Annisquam and East Gloucester was once their favorite summer habitat, and many of the guild still make those places their summer headquarters, but Rockport has many natural charms which make their appeal. The march of improvement, which has eliminated much of the picturesque in the two places first mentioned, is not as evident in this locality, hence there are more desirable subjects offering for their brushes.

These artists, summer and permanent residents, have formed an association comprising a membership of fifty. The following officers were elected:

Harry Vincent, president; Albro B. Hibbard, secretary; Mr. Smith, treasurer. These, with Chester P. Dodge as chairman, C. S. Kalin, W. Lester Stevens and Miss Turney, comprise the executive committee.

It was voted to hold an art week from August 17 to 27 and the Congregational society has kindly tendered the use of its vestry for the exhibit. A costume ball will be held at the Town hall in connection with the event, the music for which will be under the direction of Mr. Bauer of the New York Symphony orchestra.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles H. Cutting of Newburyport are again at their Marmion way house for the summer.

John Bolinger and family of Newton Center have one of the Harvey cottages on Marmion way.

tivities have won him national and international reputation.

When such a man stands up to speak in the national halls of legislation he commands attention and reflects credit on the character of the electorate which he represents.

It is rarely that a man with such broad practical experience and such high ideals offers for such a place and if the press of Boston and the district accurately reflects public opinion he will receive the nomination by an impressive majority. Nevertheless, the "machine," angered that a man of such independent characteristics and not a pliable rubber stamp, is offering—will leave no stone unturned to compass his defeat. The primary comes early in September and every one should get out and by voice and vote give Col. Andrew an impressive majority.

VISIT OF THE SEA SERPENT

Gloucester in 1817

From PRINGLE'S "HISTORY OF GLOUCESTER"

A news item this week recounts how a crowd of summer residents along the Nantasket shore gazed, goggle-eyed, at some sort of a sea monster described as from 16 to 40 feet in length and answering to the description of the sea serpent.

The "sarpint" has become a regular fixture in New England summer resort waters and almost nearly every season disports himself along the coast, often seen, but never captured.

Yet there are many who believe in the existence of the sea serpent. In August, 1817, one came into Gloucester harbor and made quite a stay. His appearance was sworn to and affidavits to that effect were filed by the leading citizens of the community. After a leisurely visit his serpentship made off for other waters.

So deep and widespread was the interest in the event that an engraving of the occurrence, after a sketch by Capt. John Beach, Jr., leading citizen, and one time collector of the port, was made and found a ready sale. The above engraving is a reproduction, which was made from what is believed to be the only copy in existence—then in a faded and frayed condition. It gives, as stated, a correct view of the town and outer harbor at that period.

Windmill hill, on which stood a windmill for grinding corn, stands out conspicuously in the center. It is now the site of the Tavern. From the left, along the beach upland, is the old rope walk. The First Parish (Unitarian) church in Middle street and, further to the left, the spire of the Universalist church stands out prominently, as well as other buildings of note.

To the right of Windmill hill, in the middle foreground, is what is now "Little Italy," Fort Point, given over to the Italian fishermen. In those days the virgin evergreen growth was not disturbed.

Further to the right was the old fort, first erected in 1743, to repel a threatened invasion of the French, a marked object with its whitewashed ramparts.

Among the buildings depicted are Tappan's Tavern, now the Community house; the Collins school building at the extreme left and the large gambreled roof structures, many of which are still standing, the residences of the well-to-do of the period. The East Gloucester territory stands out as unbuilt upon.

In 1884 the sea serpent again paid a visit to these parts. On a day in the summer of that year, when a number of the legal fraternity were holding an outing at Pigeon cove, his marine highness rolled up near the rocks and disported himself in full view of the gathering, all of which testified to his presence and movements. Among these were Judge Sumner D. York of the Eastern district court, Charles A. Russell, Esq., and others who can corroborate the accounts then published.

Learned scientists maintain that such a creature does exist, although there are many who catalogue the sea snake with the boojum and the snark and the dodo.

TO MY LADY IN SEARCH OF THE DISTINCTIVE

A SHORT, SMOOTH MOTOR TRIP TO THE SHOPS OF MAGNOLIA

The Hotel Oceanside was the scene of a merry dinner party the past week, the host and hostess being Mr. and Mrs. Clarence McMurray of New York. Among those entertained were Mr. and Mrs. James Greene of Washington, Mrs. Sidney DeKay, Mrs. William R. Nelson, Mrs. Allen and Mrs. Enis.

Mr. and Mrs. F. K. M. Rehn, Jr., who are spending the summer at the "Sea Reaches," left Sunday for Kennebunk Port, Me., for a week's visit.

Mrs. Marshall Field, who is spending the season at Hotel Oceanside, entertained her niece, Mrs. Albert J. Beveridge, at dinner during the week. Mrs. Field makes her winter home in Washington.

One of the most attractive gardens in Magnolia is that of Mr. and Mrs. Costello C. Converse of Boston. The past few weeks the garden has been constantly admired for its wealth of rambler roses, which hang in profusion along the stone wall.

Mr. and Mrs. William Chaplin of Sewickley, Penn., who are occupying the Curry cottage on Norman's Woe road, have had as their guests the past few weeks relatives of Mr. Chaplin's.

Mrs. Laura Curry Esterbrook of Syracuse, N. Y., and children are expected for the month of August.

Frequently seen on the beach enjoying a morning dip are Robert Flack of Troy, N. Y., and his fiancée, Miss Lysbeth Bunker of Yonkers, guests at Hotel Oceanside.

The Rev. and Mrs. G. C. F. Bratenohl of Washington, D. C., who are spending another season in the Ayers cottage on Lexington avenue, were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Hollis French of Squam Rock road, Annisquam, the past week.

Signor and Mrs. Gustavo di Rosa and small son are the guests of Mrs. di Rosa's mother, Mrs. William H. Scudder, of St. Louis.

Signor di Rosa has recently returned from Italy, where he was called on business.

Miss Mary C. Thornton, who is occupying "The New House" on Magnolia avenue for the season has as her guest for August Mrs. T. M. Elwell.

Greatly missed from the Oceanside group of young people this season is Miss Eleanor Wheeler, daughter of Mrs. Charles Y. Wheeler of Washington. Miss Wheeler is spending the season at Watch Hill, R. I.

Holden P. Williams, who with his family is spending the summer at Annisquam, was the recent guest of his mother, Mrs. Robert B. Williams, at her Magnolia avenue residence.

The small daughter of Stillman Williams paid a short visit to her grandmother the past week.

Richard Fay Warner was the guest of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. F. E. Warner, at Hotel Oceanside over the week-end.

Walter Williamson of Quincy, Ill., will join Mrs. Williamson at the Adams cottage on Lexington avenue for the month of August.

Mr. and Mrs. Louis Muller of Baltimore are among the seasons newcomers at Hotel Oceanside.

EASTERN POINT

ALL Eastern Point is interested in the Fair which will take place shortly on the grounds of Hawthorne Inn for the benefit of Stage Fort Park. The Fair, which is an annual one and greatly looked forward to by Eastern Point residents is under the direction of Mrs. Alice Fisher Harcourt of Hawthorne Inn.

Officers from the Mine Force Fleet made the dance at Hawthorne Inn Casino Wednesday evening a bit gayer than usual. Sewall's orchestra furnished the music as usual, and everyone who flittered by in gowns of most becoming shades seemed to be having an enjoyable time.

Bishops and Mrs. Rhinelander of Pennsylvania, who are occupying the Sinkled cottage on Eastern Point were among those present to meet Dr. William A. Bartlett, state director of the Near East Relief, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Hollis French at Annisquam on Sunday afternoon.

Mr. and Mrs. H. Spencer Haskell of Worcester are spending the season at Hawthorne Inn.

Miss Lotta Crabtree, who spends her winters at Hotel Brewster, Boston, is again occupying Pilgrim House at Rocky Neck. Other Bostonians summering in this vicinity include Mr. and Mrs. Frank C. Parmenter and daughter, Miss Priscilla Parmenter of 95 Mt. Vernon street, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Stewart of 4 Louisburg square and Mr. and Mrs. Howland Twombly of Beacon street.

Ensign Joseph C. Van Cleve of the U. S. S. Murray No. 97, who has been in Gloucester since the middle of June, will leave the first of the week for his home in Omaha, for a month's leave. This is Ensign Van Cleve's third season at Gloucester and he already feels like a permanent summer resident.

Mrs. Julia Fisher Harcourt, who is spending the season at Hawthorne Inn, makes a most attractive hostess at the Casino dances.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank E. Jones and family of 5531 Mission Drive, Kansas City arrived in June for the season at their fine estate on the Eastern Point boulevard "Moormere." With them is their son, Van Leer Jones, a student at Northwestern university.

The open meeting of the College club at the home of Mrs. Isaac Patch on Eastern Point road was an event of the week, attended by more than a hundred guests. A picnic supper was enjoyed on the terrace facing Norman's Woe, and reminiscences from the representatives of more than forty

BASS ROCKS

THE present season shows more social activity than any since the war. While there will be no golf or tennis tournaments of consequence—at least none have been announced to date, both the links and tennis courts are patronized in larger volume than for some years. This season the North Shore tennis tournament will be held at the Tedesco club, Swampscott, and roads tennisward will point up the shore.

Similarly the ladies are entertaining on a larger scale than formerly. Last Friday Mrs. McCord of New York entertained 36 at tea. Monday Mrs. Ring entertained a party of 12. Tuesday, Mrs. Miles of Boston had five tables of bridge and tea. On the same day Mrs. Allan Farmer entertained 24 at tea. Mrs. R. M. Cook of Kansas City gave a bridge of three tables, and had 18 for tea. Mrs. Frederick Boyce had six at tea Sunday.

Monday, Miss Betty Collamore had five tables of bridge and 30 for tea. Tuesday, Mrs. Bidwell of the Moorland had six tables of bridge and 24 for tea, and on Wednesday she had three tables at bridge and 14 for tea. Thursday, the entertainment committee of the Ladies club, Mrs. Arthur Mitton chairman, gave a bridge which proved one of the large affairs of the season. Yesterday Mrs. Howard W. Brown of Boston had five tables of bridge and 35 for tea.

The Ladies two-ball foursome tournament, Tuesday, was won by Miss Mary Hart and Mrs. Walter Carl.

The Saturday night dances continue to attract large numbers and are among the most enjoyable that the club has given for many seasons.

Mrs. Arthur D. Chandler of Orange, N. J., and Miss Emily Waelder of New York are the house guests of the E. B. Chandlers at "Casa del Mar."

Mr. and Mrs. John B. Drake of Chicago came several weeks ago to their residence at Grapevine cove.

C. F. Farnsworth and family of Memphis are spending the season at "Seaways," their summer home.

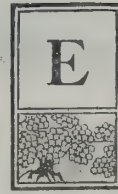

C. H. Gamage and family of Gloucester are established for the season in the summer cottage at Grapevine cove.

Mrs. D'Arcy Paul of Baltimore is occupying the Selden cottage in Briar Road.

The Alexander C. Nelsons of Ruxton, Md., came early in the season to their cottage, Briar Road.

Samuel H. Pillsbury and family of

ANNISQUAM

VERY interesting talk was given by Dr. William A. Bartlett, state director of the Near East Relief at the house of Mr. and Mrs. Hollis French of Boston, Sunday afternoon.

Dr. Bartlett emphasized the responsibility of the people of the United States towards this helpless and greatly wronged race which despite the years of serfdom and massacres have survived through the ages. The Armenian people, dwellers of our Holy Land are deserving of a better fate than the cruel Turk allows.

Mrs. Grafton Abbot of Winchester, who with her five small children is spending her second season at Annisquam, was the guest of Miss Elizabeth Miner at Hawthorne Inn, the past week.

Miss Miner was a classmate of Mrs. Abbot at Smith college.

Mr. Alden French, the second son of Mr. and Mrs. Hollis French of Annisquam left the latter part of the week for a fortnight's fishing trip on board a Gloucester vessel. The younger son, Hollis S., is in Labrador where he is with Dr. Grenfell's mission.

Very quaint and most attractive is the rock bound garden of Deaconess Goodwin on the banks of Squam river.

Annisquam may well be called a "garden town" and lovers of "old fashioned gardens"—where the hollyhock and primrose abound, will be given a rare treat.

Arrivals at Wonasquam Lodge: Mrs. Walter A. Draper and Miss Lucy Draper, Cincinnati; Mrs. C. S. Robertson, Miss Mary Robertson, Miss Jean Robertson, Miss Olive Jameson, Mrs. G. L. Whiton, Mrs. L. Joslyn Rogers, Joslyn Rogers, Jr., Toronto; Miss Alice Miller and Miss Theresa Miller, Cambridge; Mrs. N. Mr. and Mrs. John B. Drake of the Blackstone, Chicago, have been entertaining Mr. Drake's sister, Miss Helen Drake, of Chicago. The Misses Elizabeth and Katherine Drake were recent guests of their aunt, Mrs. Harry Farnum, at the "Sun Dial" cottage on Shore road, Magnolia.

Miss Dorothy Eastman of Chicago is a guest at the Drake residence.

Among the most attractive of the younger set on Eastern Point is Miss Isabelle Fishburn, daughter of Mrs. Louise Giffen Fishburn, who is spending the summer with her grandmother, Mrs. James F. Giffen, on Eastern Point road.

Miss Fishburn, whose winter home is in Baltimore, was a popular debutante a few seasons ago.

The artist colony at Eastern Point again numbers prominent artists in its midst, among them being Louis Kronberg of Boston, Hugh Breckenridge of Philadelphia, Mrs. Fern I. Coppidge of Philadelphia, Hayley Lever of New York city, Miss Ruth W. Holleck of the National Arts club, N. Y., and Felicie Waldo Howell of New York city.

Miss Katherine Pollard, daughter of Mrs. Alonzo Wilder Pollard of Boston and Eastern Point, who recently returned from Dr. Wilfred Grenfell's mission in St. Anthony, Newfoundland, is planning a sale of rugs and mats for the benefit of these isolated and often destitute fisher folk of the north.

Recent guests at "Sea Rocks," Grape Vine Cove, the Eastern Point residence of Mr. and Mrs. Jacob L. Loose of Kansas City, included Mr. and Mrs. John Clay of "Finisterre."

The Arthur G. Leonards of Chicago came early to their stone chateau, which was hastened to completion last season. While the house in the interior is practically completed, there is still some work to be done on the grounds before the entire building scheme is finished.

Commodore and Mrs. John Greenough of New York are again domiciled in their cottage on Eastern point boulevard.

C. R. Hinchman and family of Philadelphia have arrived at "The Willows" for the season.

Mr. and Mrs. Langdon Gillette of New York are at their summer home on Grapevine road.

Seth K. Ames and family of Melrose are again occupying "Sunset Rock" cottage.

Mrs. Waterman A. Taft and family of Arlington opened "Balmaha" in June.

Philip M. Tucker and family of Brookline are again occupying their summer home, "The Outlook."

The William Sheafes of Boston are at their Eastern Point summer house.

The Stephen W. Sleepers of Boston came early to their house on Eastern Point road.

W. Jay Little and family of Boston are established for the season at their Eastern Point residence.

Miss Mary E. Doyle of Detroit has the Scott house in Tragabigzanda road.

Mrs. Samuel A. Raymond and family and Mr. and Mrs. Henry A. Raymond opened "The Ramparts" in June. The place still continues to hold attention as one of the most picturesque on the North Shore. It is within the ramparts or earthworks of Fort Independence, constructed during the Civil war, a battalion of soldiers being quartered there during that period.

Jacob L. Loose and family of Kansas City are at their fine residence, "Sea Rocks," at Grapevine cove.

Mrs. A. Wilder Pollard and family of Commonwealth avenue, Boston, are at their summer house for the season.

Ma chere Amie:

Here, in quiet Cape Ann, I have had an experience! I was reclining in one of those heavenly Canton chairs, provided by Pattillo of quaint Gloucester, when, all of a sudden, a man appeared in my Adamless Eden of a garden.

He had a beautiful face—like one of those Greek gods that Miss Spout, our myth teacher, used to tell us about, remember?—and he wanted to see father. He was not well dressed, but I knew him at once for a Noble incog!

So I rested my head against a green silk cushion and asked pleasantly, "Have you been in this country long?"

Instantly he gave the impression of needing that sunburn lotion we buy at Wetherell's—shall I send you some, Ev? It's wonderful—and respectfully repeated his request.

I tried to test him more delicately by lightly remarking, "What do you think is the most important thing in life—blue blood, filthy lucre, or clothes?"

He backed away as if he knew that I was hot on his trail, saying hastily, "I'll call when your father is in."

"But which?" I gently persisted.

"Have you more than one?" he exclaimed.

When I repeated my question he rallied, "Oh, clothes!" said my Adonis (was Adonis the one that looked best without clothes? You were always good at myth. Writing is my forte) and he fairly ran out of the room!

I know I am sykick (the spelling doesn't look just right, but I know there is a "y" in it and alas! Mother has hidden the book I have on the subject)—that means so finely nerved that you attract everything without sense, like ghosts and spiritually moved furniture. It is a sort of esoteric sense that enables me to tell a nobleman from a clod of clay and what to do under the circumstances.

A sykick currant ran through me and I knew at once that I must buy fitting raiment before I met my Prince again. It just came to me that I must go alone—Mother is away and my hated chaperone, Miss Smithers, was writing letters—so I stole out, on the highways of the great wide world, absolutely ignorant of how I was to reach the buyways of Magnolia.

Fate is always with the brave (if I were writing about someone else I'd add "and beautiful," but you know how it is) and a man driving a stunning car stopped the moment I raised my hand. I knew I could trust him, because he was so plain, though quite young and rather distinguished looking.

He drove me most carefully to Magnolia, giving me fatherly advice, and suggesting that I make the return trip with him. He made me promise not to speak to any man under forty while shopping. Yes, he drew the whole story of my pilgrimage to Magnolia from me by his firm manner of questioning. He made me think of Lincoln—all but his flawless clothes. Oh, why did Drinkwater (or is it Drinkwine?—he isn't an American writer, you know, and the former sounds so American) in that play the lit. teacher made us read last year elude to Lincoln's careless habits of dress? When I am a famous writer, I shall never disturb an ideal.

Magnolia at last! I felt as one who has escaped from a hairrem (you know, Ev, one of those places in Turkey where all the women live together as we do at school, watched over by sleepless younucks—something like our professors, I suppose)—free, penniless but proud—knowing that any store would be glad to charge things to Father—I stepped from the car bent on purchasing purple and fine linen wherewith to dazzle the eyes of my Prince in Disguise.

We stopped at the Oceanside, so of course, I went to Hill & Bush first, where they have the sheerest, daintiest blouses you ever saw. But there I felt handicapped by my age, because I longed to possess an embroidered gold filet mesh over brown charmeuse, which would be wonderful with my hair, but you know what Mother is.

So I went over to the Little White

Salon and picked out an ingenue organdie, cool and virginal, embroidered in rosebuds—just about Mother's speed—but when I went upstairs to have it fitted I ran into Phyllis Brownell, who was trying on a white Canton crepe, blue figured and trimmed with blue chiffon. She is an artist, therefore she never thought of asking who was with me, but raved on about the design on the dress.

"If you drop a pebble in the water near a bank where rushes grow you will see the inspiration for this design, Marion. Isn't it interesting for a sea shore frock?"

No one but a Phyllis would have had the sense to ask my opinion, but I decided it was safer to go at once—only stopping to buy a bewitching sea green chiffon motor veil (to serve as a complimentary color for my hair) and some of that delicious perfume that Slattery's always have in stock.

I hurried right over to Miss Farrell at Lamson & Hubbard's and there was Anne buying a yellow voile "Gasque" blouse, lined with white organdie, little touches of which peeped out engagingly. She examined all the new hand-made French blouses and I thought she would never go.

Miss Farrell is so sympathetic—she hedged me off from Anne, who finally left without having seen me, and then she invited me to tell her why Mother wasn't with me. She seemed to understand everything and said the dresses could be sent on approval. She let me try on a lovely three-piece suit of heavy Canton crepe. The jacket was a cape effect, the color a celestial green and it was embroidered in silky white wool and tiny black and white glass beads. There was also the coolest white crepe dress, all embroidered in crystal beads, with a lovely silver fringe around the large arm holes and the bottom of the skirt. A luscious bunch of frosted silver grapes held the silver ribbon sash in place. I certainly would have shone in that dress!

I don't know just how Miss Farrell did it, but she led me to select a very "girlish" white net and organdie that Mother herself might have chosen for me. I think it was the Roman ribbon sash that I couldn't resist. It's really sweet, but I hate to look so young all the time. Why, Peggy's brother, Jimmy, doesn't know that I am a woman!

Then I went to Manahan's and there sat Peggy trying on the smartest hat—it had lightning zigzags stitched in brown on tan felt. The worst part of summering on Cape Ann is that it abounds in relations and ready-made friends. Of course, Peggy saw me immediately, but she is a good sport and she just acted as if I always went shopping alone. However, she tried to keep me with her—she made me look at Manahan's exquisite assortment of imported thread lace blouses. There are so many varieties, each one prettier than the other, all high necked and so nice under slip-ons—that Peggy did not have to work hard to keep me interested. After that she made me try on a green French cord love of a dress with an overblouse and a round pleated collar. Peggy herself, who likes to look young! bought a rose Irish dimity in the same style. Just then Peggy discovered some heavenly sport suits in stunning colors—mahogany, rust and dark henna. There was one in Burbury brown that was a three-piece suit with walking knickers and skirt and circular cape, which she insisted on trying on, as it was just the thing for tramping or motoring.

That's where I gave Peggy the slip and escaped to McCutcheon's and bought an imported, marvelously embroidered handkerchief—it was only twenty dollars and it is so important to have the right kind of a handkerchief in case one should drop it, you know.

And then I went to Farr's and saw all the new hand-tied belts. I bought twelve different colored ones so as to be sure they would match my sweaters. When Mother returns she is going to let me have enough Farr sweaters, fitted to order, to last the winter, because this is the only place we know where you can be measured and have your sweater woven to fit your individual shape. I did stop to try on one then and there of the new honey-dew shade. It was a "peachy" color for my hair!

I wanted to go to Thayer McNeil's, but I was afraid that some one might find me defenceless without my shoes, so I decided to hurry on to my rendezvous (that means, Ev, when a woman of the world meets a man, who isn't related to her, without her family's consent) with my stern protector.

On the way back to the Oceanside, I just peeped into Schmidt's. That place always thrills me, as it has such lovely things in it. He had just got a shipment of Dutch silver. There was one lamb of a tea set in it that I just longed to take back to boarding school with me. Just as I was leaving the store my eye lighted on a set of old English flat wear, made by Richard Crossley and stamped London, 1770. Just imagine all the lovely mouths that silver has helped to feed. You know I have a wonderful imagination—everyone says so!

I found my new escort near the Oceanside. I proposed an ice, but he said, "It's home for yours, without a chaperone," which made me pity him for not being modern.

However, he stopped, as we passed through Gloucester, and bought candy and perfectly scrumptious ice cream cones at Barker's, so we broke the bread of amity. (That last phrase isn't mine—I read it somewhere—Miss Litt, our English teacher, says to strive for truth in my written expression, hence I mention it.)

As we turned in toward home we met Papa (accent last syllable). If I don't take to literature (tragedy, I think I am best fitted for) I know I shall be a movie actress. I affectionately touched Papa's arm with my slim fingers, as I have seen it done at the North Shore Theatre, saying, "Oh, Daddy, this is the brother of a dear schoolmate of mine—Mr.—I had to cough—I didn't know his name!"

"Harry Vandervelt," growled my honest friend.

Papa beamed. "Harry J. Vander-velt's son?" he asked. "I met your father today at Hornblower & Weeks'."

Unworldly as I am I know it is a name to respect in finance (a refined term for business with real money in it) and I regretted that he had come too late into my life.

They shook hands. Papa asked him to call. I shook my head, knowing that I was reserved for one only, but Papa made him stay to tea.

A new man assisted Dents, our butler, to bring out the tea things—it was Adonis!

I could hardly breathe—I was betrayed—the tea was iced, but no colder than my heart.

When the youth disappeared, I said carelessly to Father, "Who is that clumsy creature?"

Papa laughed (I shuddered.) "Don't be so critical, Polly"—he still uses that repulsive nickname—"He's young and Dents will break him in. He is very handsome around in livery and he is the only son of my dear old nurse——"

Papa doddered on, but I did not hear him.

I turned to my protector, "Will you come to see me again?" I murmured.

"Sure thing!" he responded. "Play tennis tomorrow?"

I nodded. After all he looks what he is and his clothes are equal to the "Well Dressed Man" in Vanity Fair. Perhaps, someone will appreciate my efforts to express my personality in dress.

Je t'aime,

Marianne.

P. S.—On second thought I think I shall have this published and send you a copy of THE CAPE ANN SHORE. I have no secrets from my public—great writers never have, see the French, or the Russians. My family may object, but that is the tragedy of youth—to be unable to educate one's parents to the broader outlook on life.

Four Classes Sail Hotly Contested Races

A light baffling wind and a smooth sea with clear sky overhead prevailed in the race of the Annisquam Yacht club Saturday afternoon. There was another large turnout, 32 yachts competing, the fishes leading with 18 boats starting. The wind was south at the start, backing easterly and then hauling to the southwest. In the Bird class the course was a run down the river then a reach to the Essex buoy, a reach across to the outer mark with a beat home.

The Tern and Mavis led on the way out, with the Jay third. At the lighthouse, the Mavis was out ahead, with the Chickadee second and Tern third. On the reach to the outer mark Mavis still led, rounding 10 seconds ahead of Chickadee, with Tern 30 seconds behind. On the beat home, the Jay, sailed by James Cunningham, went up into first place and was first at the lighthouse. After the lighthouse was passed it became a see-saw game, Mavis again going into first place with the Tern second. Coming up the river a strong outgoing tide was encountered, which set the boats back. Mavis retained her lead to the end, with the Jay second.

In the Cat class, knowledge of the wind and tidal conditions undoubtedly contributed to the win for Capt. Jelly in the Catnip. The course in this class was a broad reach to Plum Cove, a reach across and a beat home.

No. 6, a new boat, got the benefit of the start and with the Catnip took the Squam side of the river, the others taking the West Parish shore. The two on the Squam side guessed right and got a puff of wind which virtually won the race right there, and when they got out of the river to the lighthouse had established a big lead. The Catnip, being a boat's length behind No. 6, the race then became a tussle between the two for the leadership.

Going to Plum Cove, Capt. Jelly luffed up under the shore, which proved another good move, getting a strengthening breeze which lifted him well into the lead. the boat turning three minutes ahead of No. 6. On the reach across to the outer mark there was no change.

On the beat home the Catenary passed No. 6 into second place. Catnip, No. 6, Catenary and Copycat going over to port on the beach shore, the others making a long hitch inshore to starboard. Coming up the river the boats bucked the strong tide, but the skippers of the Catnip and Catenary picked out the route of least resistance and finished 20 minutes ahead of the field.

Three of the T-boats sailed the regular triangular course in the Bay, Commodore Wiggin winning in the Hurrah.

Eighteen of the Fish class got away, Sanddab winning more than nine minutes ahead of the Herring, the second boat. The summary:

Sunday afternoon's race of the Annisquam Yacht club was sailed in a moderate though fluky southwest breeze and called out a good fleet of starters.

The Bird class sailed a triangular course to Essex, thence to the outer mark, two reaches, and a beat home against a strong opposing tide out of the river.

Honors were easy at the start, most of the boats taking the Squam side of the river, those which took the westerly route gaining thereby, getting to the lighthouse first on the run down, the Chickadee rounding the channel buoy slightly in the van of the field.

On the reach for Essex the fleet divided up, going off wind hunting, the skipper of the Chickadee making a bee line for the buoy and getting there first, with the Albatross 15 seconds behind, the Tern, right on his quarter, being third boat.

On the reach across to the outer mark the Albatross pulled into the lead, rounding the buoy five seconds ahead of the Chickadee, the Tern and Mavis being a half minute astern.

The Mavis stood over to the eastward on the beat home, the majority going off to port to westward. At the channel buoy the Mavis was leading, and Tern a close second.

Beating up the river is a crucial test of sailing and Jack Hooper, who had challenged the Mavis, went into first place at Bar Rock, finishing to the good.

Don Jelly in the Catnip, who has got his boat going strong in recent races, again landed another first, hunting pockets in some of the coves under the bluffs and choosing a spot in the river where the tide is least forceful when bucking against it.

All the cats got away evenly, the course being reaches to Plum Cove and to the inner mark, and a beat home. The Kittiwake was the first to get around Plum Cove buoy, with the Catnip a close second. On the reach to the inner mark, Catnip pulled out ahead and stretched out her lead a half minute.

On the windward work all save Fred Hawkins in the Catchup stood to starboard inshore. Hawkins, who was far behind, took a chance and went off by his lonesome to port, striking it right, being in first place when the fleet bunched up at the lighthouse, the Catnip being a half minute behind. All then tacked for the beach. Capt. Jelly, however, made a tack across the sandbar under the small beach and hit a good breeze, which proved

ROCKAWAY

The Rockaway is running the usual Friday night hops which are very gay with the pretty gowns of the ladies and everyone enters into the spirit of the occasion with enthusiasm.

Card parties are held in the living room every Thursday evening and first prizes were won by Mrs. Du Quesne of Paris and Mrs. Seldon of Detroit.

Summering at the Rockaway are a number of golf enthusiasts. On Wednesday Capt. Lowell and Capt. Fitz of the U. S. Navy and Dr. Vaughan and Prof. Brackett of Boston played a foursome at the Rockport links. Dr.

Vaughn had a remarkably low score, so they say, but the captains show the old navy spirit and will not be downed and immediately challenged them for a return battle, which will be fought out in the near future.

Arrivals at the Rockaway: Frank A. Hoops, Boston; Dr. and Mrs. M. E. Gleason, Newton; Mrs. F. M. Turnbull, Cambridge; Elizabeth Smith, Brighton; Mrs. F. H. Kane, Miss I. M. Kane, Somerville; Mrs. W. ROCKAWAY FISHERMEN

W. D. Wooldredge of Newton Lands a Prize Winning Codfish

The July contest of the Rockaway fishermen is closed. The winner of the prize offered to the guest landing the largest fish was won by W. D. Wooldredge of West Newton. The next in order was Charles J. Riter of Philadelphia.

The fish caught by Mr. Wooldredge was one of the finest landed for some time, weighing 87 pounds six ounces, dressed. It was taken 20 miles east by south from Thatcher's Island, a place frequented by salts of their class. The crew on this voyage comprised R. R. Cleland, Springfield; Charles Bird, Boston; Messrs. Riter, Wooldredge and Wister Wooldredge. They were in the Rockaway motor boat.

Recent arrivals at the Rockaway: Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Sims and Miss Lilla Sims, Savannah; Mrs. W. H. Coffin, Chestnut Hill; Mrs. Allen Lee, Cincinnati; Mrs. W. A. Johnson, Savannah; Mr. and Mrs. H. Slack, Lowell; Alice M. Smith, Brighton; Mrs. E. V. Hoyt, Burlington, Vt.; Mr. and Mrs. Wm. E. Burrage, Cambridge; L. H. Horton, R. H. Tatum, Boston; Mr. and Mrs. Olive M. Oean, Shrewsbury; M. L. Holbrook, Rosindale; C. W. Woolredge, West Newton.

THE SILENT SENTINEL OF GLOUCESTER HARBOR
SINCE TIME BEGAN.

Most people feel that sodas dispensed in a clean, highly polished glass taste better than when served in a paper cup. This is one of the special features at Barker's Drug Store. All glasses are carefully washed and polished. No short measure glasses are used at this fountain.
